The twenty-first century is an age of complex networks that are the result of constant generation of information. There are terabytes of data being generated on a daily basis that need both human and artificial intelligence to synergise. This increasing interface, combined with the anxieties of the demands of living in a competitive, consumer oriented and balance sheet centric society leads to unprecedented amounts of stress and unpredictable behavior. Often, in the race to succeed, the values and ethics that make us human are left behind. Education systems today are incorporating core values in their syllabi to help young people develop a strong sense of ethics. They are enabled and empowered with a sense of justice and discretion that are crucial in their capacities as professionals. Ultimately, inculcating these values contributes constructively towards the formation of an ethically and morally sound society.

The two day National Seminar, Ethics in Higher Education: Policies and Praxis, organized by All Saints' College, Trivandrum in association with Globethics.net and the Journal of Dharma: Dharmaram Journal of Religions and Philosophies, aims to engage scholars, academics and students in a dialogue to have significant insights into fashioning policies for imparting ethics in institutions of higher education. Further, the role of ethics in the lives of students and the ways it shapes instructional structures in higher education forms the crux of the seminar. We hope that the deliberations of the seminar will render fruitful conversations as to the nature and new directions that ethics and values need in this new age.
